

WHO WE ARE

Canada is traditionally an immigration country and has welcomed millions of newcomers over the course of its history. Currently Canada admits over 300,000 new permanent residents every year, as well as hundreds of thousands of temporary students and workers, and millions of visitors. This has shaped Canada into a multi-cultural society that is famous for its diversity and for its tolerance. Canada is also well recognized for its humanitarian tradition and adherence to the upholding of human rights. As part of this tradition, every year Canada welcomes tens of thousands of refugees fleeing war and persecution in their home countries. For those who wish to come to Canada, the first step is to assess the various categories under which Canada admits people, and decide which category is appropriate for you considering your individual circumstances.
